

ABSTRACT

A transition test on an engine is conducted by simulation using a simulation model of the engine. In the test, the operator can visually grasp the setting state of a control value of the engine when setting the control value. The simulation results and the control value used for the simulation are displayed in time series with graphs. The graph of the control value displayed in time series is drag-operated in the display screen to manually alter the control value.